Nature of Request

This is a request for a new on-campus Bachelors of Arts program in History of Art, Design, and Visual Culture to be awarded by the Department of Art and Design in the College of Letters, Arts, and Social Sciences.

Quality

The program will adhere to the guidelines of NASAD accreditation criteria and the College Arts Association.

Duplication

Although in many ways innovative, this program will follow the model of the most progressive and successful existing programs in Art History, Visual Culture, and Visual Studies in American and foreign institutions. Overall, the program is quite unique in its particular interdisciplinary components and overarching objectives.

Need for Program

Vision, visualization, in short, the visual, is quite simply the most vital location for the production of meaning, knowledge and information in our world today. What has been called “the visual turn”--the proliferation and dissemination of images and the visual, more or less beginning with the invention of photography in the 19th century—has been recognized as one of the most important fields of inquiry for not only the humanities but for all the cross-disciplinary components of cultural studies in general. As a subject that touches upon the most potent components of globalization and cultural exchange in today’s societies it is of infinite relevancy for every student in the university, and something that will only continue to grow in importance in the 21st century. What is important to emphasize is that this program underscores the role of images and the visual from the perspective of various disciplines and theoretical and cultural perspectives. The study and critique of the visual is something of deep concern for literature, linguistic studies, the social sciences, medicine, economics, architecture, communications, and of course the humanities in general. The major will thus provide a rigorous grounding in the history, theory, and cultural relevancy of images and their environments. Through a consistent emphasis on an interdisciplinary and comparative curriculum, the program will focus on the inherent historical and cultural intersections between the fine and applied arts, design, architecture, music, dance, theater, history, literature, philosophy, the social sciences, and foreign languages. Each course in the curriculum will facilitate communication between disciplines and will encourage an understanding of the complex interrelations between the conception, design, creation, construction, and dissemination of cultural products, an issue of great relevancy in today’s highly visualized world. The program will provide not just the Department of Art and Design and the College of 1Examples of thriving programs offering a major in Visual Culture include the University of California Riverside, which offers a interdisciplinary major in Film and Visual Culture through its College of Humanities, Arts, and Social Sciences; The University of California Santa Cruz offers a major in Art History with a concentration in Religion and Visual Culture through its Division of the Arts; The University of Otago in New Zealand offers an interdisciplinary degree in Visual Culture; The University of Alberta offers a degree in History of Art, Design, and Visual Culture through its Art and Design program; The University of Westminster has recently established a prominent major in Visual Culture concentrating on art culture and diversity. The most influential and academically renowned program is at the University of Chicago under the direction of W.J.T. Mitchell. Professor Mitchell has been helpful in developing the prospectus for our program and is one of the consulting faculty that will continue to give advice as the program develops.

Letters, Arts, and Social Sciences, but the University of Idaho at large with a model interdisciplinary program that extends beyond the conservative academic boundaries of traditional Art History programs.

With this in mind, the program in the History of Art, Design, and Visual Culture will encourage students to approach their educational experience in terms of cross-disciplinary body of knowledge rather than strict specialization, resulting, on the one hand, in an appreciation and understanding between images and culture in general, and on the other hand, it will prepare students for a world in which the categories of art, design, media, history, and theory are constantly being reinvented and redefined—a process which inherently engages in the breaking and redefining of disciplinary boundaries, methodological restraints, and theoretical-critical objectives.

The vision of the program is to successfully compliment and enhance the existing Art and Design, Art Education, Architecture, Film and Theater, and Music programs, on the one hand, and to contribute a new, highly vital, relevant, and powerfully fundamental program to the College of Letters, Arts, and Social Sciences and the University of Idaho undergraduate community. The curriculum apparatus of the program will promote and support increased faculty and cross-disciplinary contributions and will encourage the development of new courses as the university changes and grows. There will also be the opportunity for growing collaboration with the art history program at Washington State University.²

Given that there are no Art History or similar programs in the state of Idaho the program will fill an immediate vacuum by providing a unique and progressive curriculum. But the appeal of such a program reaches beyond the typical student interested in art and design. The program will appeal to any student interested in pursuing the study of culture in any or all of its manifestations.

Consistency with Mission of the University

The proposed Bachelors of Arts program in History of Art, Design, and Visual Culture will be consistent with the stated mission of the University of Idaho by providing an exemplary interdisciplinary vehicle for not just the “preservation, advancement, and transmission of knowledge,” but by complimenting, stimulating, and enriching the existing strengths of the university’s liberal arts undergraduate and graduate communities at large.

Resources

The proposed program will be have no fiscal impact on existing programs in the department of Art and Design nor on the university itself. The program will function through existing faculty and curriculum resources. Library resources are adequately in line with what would be required for research needs for possible majors (in fact, the adequate extant library resources in terms of books on art and design history and visual culture are arguably not being utilized simply because of the lack of a major in this area). The curriculum has been designed so that an operative and consistent rotation of courses will be made available to majors. The College’s Visual Resource Center has recently expanded its collection of slides and has implemented an extensive digitization of images which is concurrent with the expanded art history and visual culture courses that have been added to the catalog. A number of faculty in the College have and continue to avail themselves of this expanding pedagogical resource.

²This will be particularly beneficial in terms of non-Western art history. We will begin by cross listing WSU’s Fine Arts 301: Arts of Native North America, and Fine Arts 302: Arts of Asia, while offering Art 205: Visual culture, Art 208: Italian Renaissance Art and Culture, and Art 213: History and Theory of Modern Design as cross-listed courses for WSU’s students. We have confirmed these first steps towards a fuller collaboration with Professor Carol Ivory, Chair of the Department of Fine Arts at Washington State University.
