

College of Letters, Arts and Social Sciences
Proposed Catalog Changes
Effective Summer 2020

Interdisciplinary Studies

1. Reactivate the following course:

INTR 201 Major/Career Exploration & Decision Making1 credit

Students are taken through the career decision-making process. Through career assessments, occupation & industry research, and informational interviews, students will learn about themselves and explore possible careers in order to narrow down their options and make informed major and career decisions.

Rationale: This course was mistakenly made inactive for the 2020-2021 catalog year. It should not have been made inactive as it is regularly taught and is being currently offered.

Department of Sociology and Anthropology

1. Reactivate the following courses:

ANTH 462 Human Issues in International Development3 credits

Gen Ed: Social Science, International

Joint-listed with ANTH 562, Cross-listed with LAS 462

Course content includes the historical and political contexts that shape development, development theories, and approaches, along with the global challenges of poverty, social inequalities, and environment. Culture as an important consideration in development is emphasized. Additional projects/assignments required for graduate credit. (Alt/years)

Rationale: This course is already in the catalog and is offered every other year (last offered Fall 2018) but was mistakenly placed on the inactive list. It needs to be reactivated so that we can offer it this Fall.

ANTH 562 Human Issues in International Development3 credits

Joint-listed with ANTH 462

Course content includes the historical and political contexts that shape development, development theories, and approaches, along with the global challenges of poverty, social inequalities, and environment. Culture as an important consideration in development is emphasized. Additional projects/assignments required for graduate credit. (Alt/years)

Rationale: This course is already in the catalog and is offered every other year (last offered Fall 2018) but was mistakenly placed on the inactive list. It needs to be reactivated so that we can offer it this Fall.